BARGAINS Specials

These are quite over-worked words and are many times erroneously used. Mr. Webster defines "bargain" as follows: "That which is acquired or sold at a low price." This is a very clear definition of the word and applies to the Special and Bargain Lots offered in COINS AND CHATTER.

There are several reasons for my offering these special collections so cheaply: My business is, for the most part, mail order and it does not pay to advertise many low priced items where the demand is small or we have a limited amount. This applies, mainly, to the Foreign and Ancients. Also, due to our extensive advertising, we purchase a great many collections and these always contain more of the common material than the scarcer items so badly needed. In order to keep a balanced stock, this surplus is grouped into small collections and offered at Bargain Prices.

Previous to COINS AND CHATTER, we liquidated this type of material to other dealers at wholesale prices. Now we are passing on these savings to the collector. I am bringing this to the attention of our readers because many believe these Specials and Bargains to be inferior material due to the exceptionally low price. That is not true. These lots are made up from the surplus of my regular stock and are first quality, the same as if purchased separately but at a considerable savings.

Like everything else, these are sold on a "guaranteed-to-satisfy-or-your-money-refunded" basis.

Money Doesn't Last?

Wanna Know Why?

Now even the Government admits that your money doesn't last as long as it should.

Experts say the special paper used for folding money should be allowed to age three months before engraving and another three months before it's issued. This aging, they say, makes the money wear better.

Government stocks of paper dwindled so low recently that the Treasury had to print a lot of bills without letting the paper age properly. So, it isn't high taxes alone that keeps your money from lasting as long as it used to!

NEW CANADIAN DOLLAR HAS INITIALS OF NEW ENGRAVER

The new 1949 Silver Dollar commemorating Newfoundland's entry into Confederation has been released through the chartered Canadian banks by the Bank of Canada, Ottawa, to the Canadian public. An initial minting of 300,000 pieces has been made. Further issues of the coin will depend on the demand for them.

The reverse of the new dollar depicts John Cabot's three masted vessel, the "Matthew." Designed and engraved by Tom Shingles, his initials "T.S." can be seen to the right of the ship. He has been doing engraving at the mint the past eleven years, ever since he came to Canada from Birmingham, England, where he became skilled in the task of cutting designs in steel. This is the second coin of Canadian mintage to carry his initials; the first a victory nickel of tombac metal was issued in 1943 and his initials can be seen to the right of the base of the "TV" and torch.

Henry Paget, of London, joined with Mr. Shingles to produce the "eight-bit" beauty. His design of the uncrowned effigy of the king appears on the obverse side, along with his initials "H.P." at the base of the neck.

Granting artists, designers and engravers the privilege of signing their work is only a recent innovation of the Royal Canadian Mint policy. Before 1924, when initials first appeared on Canadian coins, the artist was a nonentity.

A famed Canadian sculptor and designer, Emanuel Hahn, gained his niche in history with his initial "H" at the base of the caribou's throat on the reverse side of the current 25 cent piece which he designed. It is also under the hull of his fishing schooner design on the 10 cent piece. His initials "E.H." also appear on the lower left hand corner of the reverse side of silver dollars issued in previous years, showing two Indians plying a swift-flowing river in a canoe. This is also his creation.

Kruger Gray, another United Kingdom craftsman, completed an intricate pattern of Canada's armorial bearings and his initials "K.G." may be seen on either side of the crown on the Dominion's 50 cent piece. Mr. Gray's initials also appear on the one-cent maple leaf piece and the five-cent beaver-on-a-log design.

These are the artists, sculptors and engravers who create and prepare the symbols that appear on Canadian silver, nickel and copper coins and who, thereby, are carving and designing their way into history.

COINED VICTORY

Though it took the Romans a few centuries longer than the Greeks to set up a system of circular coinage, they produced "manish" coinage that strongly accentuated architecture in their history, rather than attempt to match the beauty of small minted pieces used by the Greeks.

In a couple of incidents, two prominent Romans day-dreamed their way to fabulous triumphs on coins. Nero gave numismatists a fine glimpse of the Arch of Nero, struck off by him to celebrate his trouncing of the Parthians. Actually he fiddled around too long and never did get around to mashing his coin-beaten victims.

Mark Anthony pulled the wool over the eyes of Cleopatra when he had a coin issued depicting the Siren of the Nile as "Queen of Kings and Descendant of Kings," and shared the other side with her, advertising himself as "Conqueror of the Armenians." Anthony neglected to inform Cleopatra of the good mauling these "crushed" Armenians had handed him on one of his expeditions into their domain.

Prince Edward Island must be given credit for trying more original schemes than any other part of Canada in attempts to surmount the financial difficulties of the early nineteenth century.

In 1836, for instance, a Charlottetown merchant put into circulation a note made of leather. He promised to pay ten shillings or one half Spanish dollar to anyone presenting four of these notes for redemption. A year or two later, the Island authorities experimented. The higher rate of exchange on the mainland made it difficult to keep the Spanish dollar on the Island, and the situation was aggravated by a shortage of small change. In an attempt to solve the problem the center of the large Spanish dollar was punched out. Mutilated in this way it would not be accepted anywhere but on the Island. The small central pieces were to be used as shillings. Unfortunately for the authorities, someone discovered, so the story goes, that as scrap silver they were worth more than a shilling. A large number were supposed to have been shipped to England to be converted into bar silver. The ship which carried them, however, was lost at sea, and this is given credit for the great scarcity of these center pieces.

Same Collection, strictly Fine or better$ 4.95

LARGE CENTS

4 Different dates in nice, Unc. condition $ 8.25

HALF DIMES

10 Different dates or Mint marks. Very good to Very fine, only $2.35

MAGNIFYING GLASSES

52 MM. (Nearly 2 inches in diameter)
12 Diopters - Focal lens

For many years I have looked for a glass that was adequate and could be sold at a popular price. This one meets both requirements. Nothing fancy, just a plain lens that really does the job.
